

Edit At Home

Beginning August 1, AccessVision will offer portable editing kits for its members to check out. These kits will enable producers to edit their programs at home.

Editing kits consist of a MacBook laptop computer, camcorder and accessories. The computers are set up with all the same software as in the edit rooms, and will allow users to produce a finished DVD of their programs.

Certified producers may reserve the take-home editing equipment for a maximum of four days and are expected to be completely finished with their project(s) by the end of their scheduled time. Extensions may be given if equipment is available. If the producer is not finished with their project upon checking the equipment in, they will be allowed backup storage for their digital media at AccessVision on a portable hard drive.

The equipment will be reserved only to members in good standing, who have completed camcorder and digital editing training sessions. The very first project must be completed in one of the AccessVision edit rooms, along with having aired at least one program, before the producer will be allowed to take the equipment home.

If you are interested in checking out a portable editing kit, please see an AccessVision staff person for a quick rundown on how to hook up the laptop and get the full list of rules for checking out and using the equipment.

AccessVision's New Look

If you've been to AccessVision lately, you may have noticed the new window signage on the outside of the conference room. Photos of programs in production, along with AccessVision's logo and tag line, give the facility a higher-profile identity in downtown Battle Creek.

The graphics were printed and applied by Signs & Designs. AccessVision would like to thank Jerry Ure (owner) and Rick Spiker for their continued support over the years. Signs & Designs is a very professional operation.
